STEFAN BEHNISCH: WE ARE AT THE BEGINNING OF A NEW ERA

–The Copenhagen Climate Summit was a huge disappointment. National egoisms and conservative economic considerations are still ruling politics. If we do not master the subject of sustainability within the next few years, the costs for the following generations will be unbearable and most of our states will run the risk of going bankrupt.

Stefan Behnisch is a leading figure within sustainable architecture. He has received many international distinctions including the Global Award For Sustainable Architecture 2007. Behnisch Architects will take part in WOOD 2010.

–We are at the beginning of a new development, a new era. Our daily lives will be characterised by the insight that the planet has limited resources and that the atmosphere no longer can cope with the levels of energy waste we have had in the past.

–Since the early nineties we have been committed to contributing to a more sustainable built environment. We have always tried to achieve an innovative, more responsible architecture, an architecture that responds not only to human needs, but also to our environmental necessities.

The Architecture of Necessity forms part of WOOD 2010, Sweden's biggest exhibition on wood architecture and sustainable development. The exhibition takes place at Virserum Art Museum in Sweden between 9 May and 19 September, after which it will go on a tour of the rest of Europe.
